NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF STANDARDS AND TECHNOLOGY
AND THE
AMERICAN SOCIETY OF MECHANICAL ENGINEERS

Abstract

This report highlights examples of interactions between the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) and the American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME) over the past several years. It is meant to be representative, not all-inclusive. The interactions are organized by discipline in the following categories: Conferences, Committee Memberships and Contribution to Standards, Editors, Publications, Honors and Awards, and Special Activities. The report illustrates many activities which are designed to disseminate NIST's most recent technical advances and to learn of the technical challenges facing engineers in industry.

1. INTRODUCTION

In this era of rapid technological change, the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST)¹ and the American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME) maintain a synergistic relationship that benefits the engineering profession and the Nation. NIST is the Nation's central reference laboratory for physical, chemical, and engineering measurements. In addition, the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 expanded NIST's mission to further assist industry in the development of technology and procedures needed to improve quality, modernize manufacturing processes, ensure product reliability, manufacturability, functionality, and cost-effectiveness, and to facilitate the more rapid commercialization of products based on new scientific discoveries. NIST is the only major Federal laboratory with a direct mission to support American industry.

ASME is a nonprofit technical and educational organization with approximately 118,000 members nationwide working in industry, government and academia. The Society has more than 200 local Sections covering all 50 states and 34 technical divisions representing a broad diversity of engineering expertise. The ASME plays an important role in NIST's efforts to fulfill its mission. Technical conferences and publications sponsored by the ASME provide a forum for NIST staff to disseminate their most recent technical advances and in turn to learn of the technical challenges facing engineers in industry. NIST staff contribute to the development of ASME standards as these standards are an effective means of assuring that technical advances are incorporated in industrial practice.

NIST has had extensive interactions with ASME for many years. Peer relationships in many technical areas have led to these interactions which are distributed throughout the NIST organization. Likewise, within ASME many of the committees and technical divisions have been interacting with NIST.

In 1985, ASME formed a Committee to increase interactions between NIST and ASME. ASME recognized the extensive on-going activities underway between the two organizations and stressed that the new Committee's work will not disrupt or interfere with these on-going activities. On the contrary ASME and NIST agreed to use these on-going activities as models to expand the relationship in other areas of mutual interest. In preparation for the first Committee meeting in August 1985, a report was prepared to summarize ASME/NIST interactions. It has been periodically updated.

¹The National Bureau of Standards (NBS) became the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) on August 23, 1988, when the President signed the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act. NIST retains all of the NBS functions in addition to new programs that will further encourage improved use of technology by U.S. industry.

In view of this change in the name, the ASME/NBS Interactions Committee has been redesignated as the ASME/NIST Interactions Committee. The abbreviations NBS and NIST are both used in this report depending on the time of the activity being reported.

2. SUMMARY OF ACTIVITIES

This report is meant to be representative, not all-inclusive. It excludes general Society membership.

The NIST/ASME activities are summarized in the following categories:

- Conferences
- Committee Memberships and Contributions to Standards
- ASME Editors
- Publications
- Honors and Awards
- Special Activities

Details of these activities are contained in Appendix A of this report and are organized by the appropriate NIST working unit. A summary of these activities follows.

Conferences

Recently, NIST scientists and engineers have participated as session chairmen, co-chairmen, organizers, and panel members in over 35 ASME conferences, meetings, symposiums, and workshops. For example, they have been very active in many of the Winter and Summer Annual Meetings, the National Heat Transfer Conferences, Computers in Engineering Conferences, and the Solar Energy Division Conferences. In addition, over 100 papers by NIST authors have been presented at ASME conferences and meetings.

Committee Memberships and Contributions to Standards

Over the past few years, NIST scientists and engineers have been active in over 30 ASME committees and subcommittees and hold such positions as chairman and vice-chairman.

As a result of NIST research and coordination with ASME committee members, several significant standards and measurement practices have been adopted. For example, based on major input from the members of the Heat Transfer in Electronic Equipment Committee, as well as industry and academia, the 1987 Book of Semiconductor Equipment and Materials International (SEMI) Standards published the first standardized approach for using a wind-tunnel for forced-air convection testing of microelectronic devices. NIST participation in the Committee on Surface Roughness helped to carry out two major revisions of the surface roughness standard. A standard for the Coordinate Measurement Machine was also developed in the Coordinate Measuring Machine Performance Evaluation Committee in which two NIST engineers are members. Progress in PDES and IGES has also been advanced as the result of ASME and NIST interactions in the Computer Representation of Product Definition Data Committee.

ASME Editors

Dr. John W. Lyons, the Director of NIST's National Engineering Laboratory, is an Editorial Advisor for ASME's Manufacturing Review. In addition, other NIST researchers have served as associate editors and engineering reviewers for several ASME journals.

Publications

In addition to the numerous papers published in conference proceedings, the NIST technical staff has contributed more than 30 articles in the following major ASME publications: Mechanical Engineering, the Journal of Computers in Mechanical Engineering, the Journal of Engineering for Industry, the Journal of Solar Energy, the Journal of Heat Transfer, and ASME NEWS.

Honors

In 1986, ASME recognized Jeffrey Fong as an ASME Fellow. The ASME Council on Engineering honored him with a Distinguished Lectureship in 1988 and he received a Certificate of Appreciation from the Board of Governors in 1987. In 1989, David Didion was named ASME Fellow for recognition in the fields of heat transfer and building refrigeration equipment.

Special Activities

NIST participates in the ASME National Laboratory Technology Transfer Committee with the purpose of promoting technology transfer to the ASME membership.
